Laurette Dubé

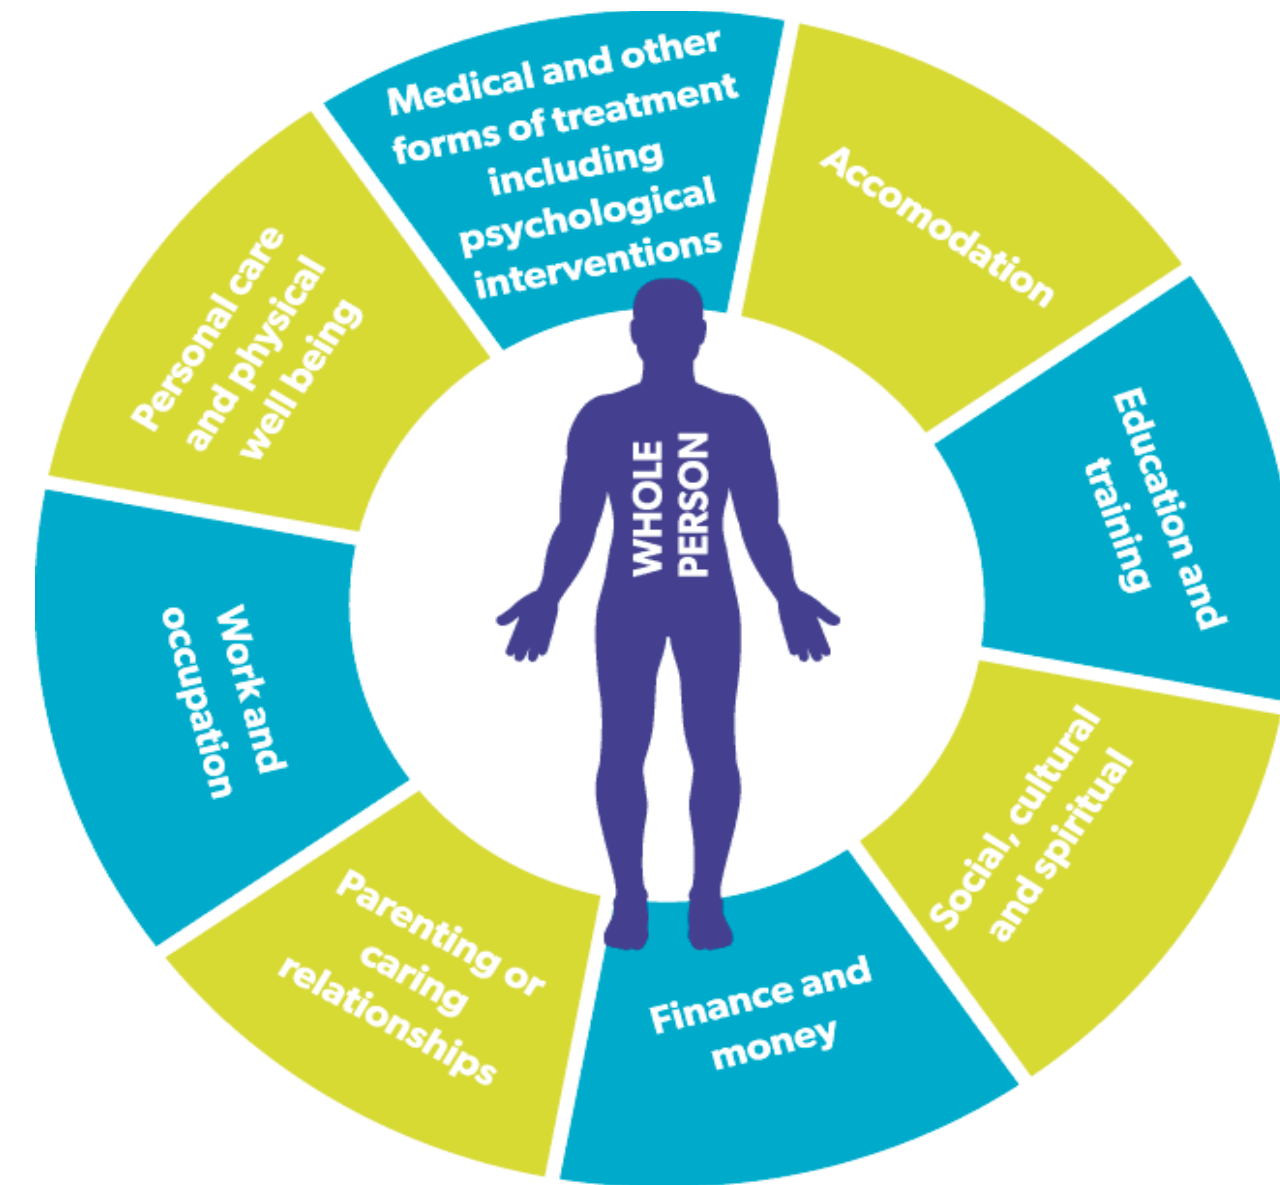

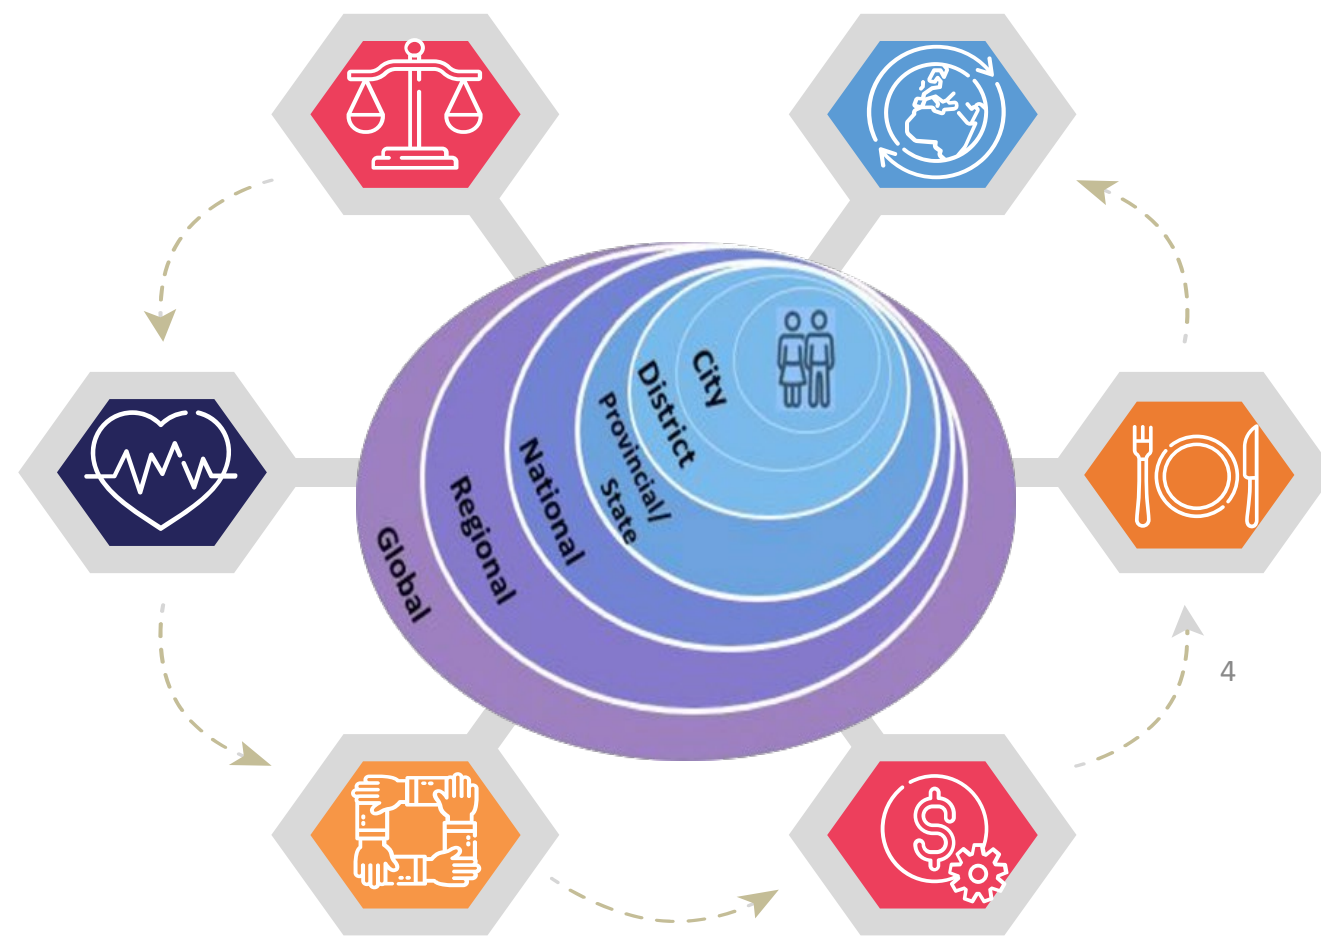

For more than two decades, with a worldwide network of scientists of diverse disciplines and visionary action leaders, I have spearheaded the development of what is now called the convergence-by-design approach to science, technology, and innovation, applied in domain/disciplinary-specific transformation for a better alignment between human biology and human-made systems and society. Health and healthcare are most pressing targets for such transformation

Conclusion

1

GCSAYN and other such initiatives are key to set appropriate mindsets and skillsets in youth and women and, by doing so, transforming all the natural, social and economic systems that it supports to accelerate reaching SDG

2

Youth and women can be not only advocates from one Summit to the next but most importantly catalysts for change in their own and other generations for accelerating SDGs
